is being provided to eliminate the use of outdated regulations and training materials in the courses. Although the lack of new cases continues to be a problem, there is a good prospect of having three or four new cases prepared by a recent assignee from SR. Acquiring good case materials from the Area Divisions is not a problem, but a substantial number of man-hours are required to prepare and sanitize the materials for class use.

5. [REDACTED] described his own functions as Chief of the Operations School. He evaluates new course requests to determine whether the requested subject matter duplicates or should be incorporated in an existing course. Colonel White inquired as to the value of the present maritime training courses. Mr. Baird indicated that the courses received good ratings from the [REDACTED] but that obtaining good maritime training officers is difficult because the best qualified personnel are being assigned to [REDACTED]. Mr. Baird is still not satisfied with the present maritime phase and believes further improvement is needed.

7. Colonel White asked if [REDACTED] should not be encouraged to hire through the JOT Program or to provide its personnel with JOT type training. Mr. Baird suggested that pertinent information on this subject should be available in the IG survey when it is completed.

8. Colonel White indicated that he wanted to explore the possibility of getting additional classroom space at Headquarters or in other suitable buildings. The two rooms now being used at Headquarters are not satisfactory and should at least be improved.
